Thought for the Week – from Caroline

Lamentations 3:40 "Let us test and examine our ways, and return to the LORD!"

In the 28 years since my marriage breakdown the Lord has shown me my part and it's been a painful journey but a necessary journey; yes, I was a victim but so was my husband and I have had to say sorry to God and take responsibility for my part. I still have wounds and regrets but am no longer angry and unforgiving. If we think of ourselves as the victim in all that life throws at us then we are not being honest; we are not facing issues about our own behaviours that need to be addressed and unless we ask God to show us and help us we will remain blind to ourselves. The devil likes nothing better than for you to see yourself as a victim and will take you down the side road signposted "self-pity" (not a good place to be). I will keep this short for the moment but we can explore this more in another Thought for the Week. Think on this: at its heart, a victim mentality is actually a way to avoid responsibility for yourself or your life.
